A Connecting Link with the Old Country.

TO British people a Magazine which emanates from the old country must ever be a strong connecting link. It keeps up their interest in the affairs of the land of their birth, by bringing under their notice the current topics and the phases of thought and feeling at home. A perusal of its pages rekindles the affection lying dormant in the heart for the things which concern the Home-land, and tends to annihilate the distance separating the new country and the old. Everything depends, of course, upon the periodical selected, but the following list contains Magazines which will suit the taste of every member of the household in whatever part of the world people may be situated.
